COMPANY B, FIRST REGIMENT, ARIZONA NATIONAL GUARD

The military spirit reigns supreme in Camp Harry J. Jones, Douglas, and "Our Boys" are working hard to get the camp in first-class shape.

Sunday was visitors' day. Many people arriving at the camp to visit the soldier boys and watch them clearing away the mesquite, digging trenches, erecting tents and getting things in order. Company B (Ours), of Safford, was the first company to reach camp Friday evening. They made camp within six blocks of the international line.

The boys are doing well and take to their work like veterans.

Sunday dinner was the best in camp, consisting of roast beef, potatoes, beans, good bread and jam or preserves.

The company street is spick and span and the boys dug a pit in which all trash is burned, the sanitary training began at the start. The health of the Camp is fine.

It was thought that the National Guard would be mustered into Federal service at once, but this will not be accomplished for several days.

Capt. Berkeley Enoch, Eleventh Infantry, has been appointed chief mustering officer by Gen. T. F. Davis. Only two of the Arizona regiment have been mustered into the service, Capt. A. C. Taylor and the adjutant, Lieut. Clyde Pickett.

The second and third battalion, machine gun platoon and regimental band of the Fourteenth Infantry, Col. R. H. Wilson, commanding, arrived in camp Tuesday.

Private Bruce Anglin, of Company B, left here Monday for Camp Harry J. Jones, at Douglas. Private Weaver Brier left on Tuesday's train, which was delayed until 5:45 p.m. on account of the wrecking of a work train near the Lone Star station.

Tom Childers and Otto Lester left Saturday afternoon by auto to visit the boys at Camp Harry J. Jones. They returned early Monday morning. They reported everybody well and in happy spirits and Company B making a fine camp. Captain Roach is with his men at the head of the company street.
